

The Ego and Its Own
Max Stirner

Nothing is sacred. Nothing is binding.

In this incendiary work, Max Stirner strips away the abstractions that claim dominion over human life. Against them, he places the individual: not as citizen, believer, or subject, but as owner of the self.

Part philosophy, part provocation, this radical work dismantles the illusions that govern society and invites the reader to reclaim what has always been theirs—the power to define, to reject, and to become.
